III. Further, Advantages of Faculty Start-ups to the Institute:

Faculty startups at Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) bring several advantages from the perspectives of NIRF (National Institutional Ranking Framework), NAAC (National Assessment and Accreditation Council), and NBA (National Board of Accreditation). Here are some key benefits:

- Entrepreneurship Ecosystem: HEIs with faculty startups create a vibrant entrepreneurship ecosystem on campus. This is highly valued by NIRF as it signifies the institution's contribution to societal development beyond traditional academic pursuits. A strong entrepreneurship ecosystem encourages students and faculty to explore entrepreneurial ventures, thereby fostering a culture of creativity and risk-taking.
- Industry Collaboration: Faculty startups often engage in collaborations with industries for research, development, and commercialization of products or services. Such collaborations enhance the institution's visibility and reputation in the eyes of NIRF and NBA, as they indicate the institution's relevance to the industry and its ability to translate academic research into real-world applications.
- Social Impact: Faculty startups often address pressing societal challenges through their products or services, thereby contributing to social welfare. This aligns with the societal outreach and inclusivity criteria of NAAC. Moreover, NIRF considers the institution's social impact through parameters such as outreach and inclusivity, which can be positively influenced by the activities of faculty startups.

Faculty start-ups at HEIs contribute significantly to institutional excellence and competitiveness, aligning with the parameters and criteria set forth by NIRF, NAAC, and NBA. They not only enhance research and innovation but also foster entrepreneurship, industry collaboration, employability, revenue generation, social impact, and global recognition. Therefore, fostering an environment conducive to the emergence and growth of faculty start-ups is advantageous for HEIs seeking to excel in national and international rankings and accreditation assessments.
